Good day. My name is Deon E. Adams and I am contacting you today to share some of my ideas with you. For years I have been studying the environment and thinking of different ways to help clean out our air and water. One of my ideas is to take old oil tankers and convert them into water tankers to help clean out Dead Zones and provide clean water for third world countries. The best thing about converting oil tankers into water tankers, there is always water around that needs to be cleaned.

What we can do is use oil eating mushrooms to eat the oil out of the tankers. Afterwards, we take the mushrooms and place them in drums along with hemp-like kelp. Then we place the drums in the heart of the Dead Zones to see if it can help clean it up. Once the tankers are cleaned, sprayed, and lined with rubber we can set up a system similar to the Tampa Bay Sea Water Desalination Plants reverse osmosis process.

The system would be set up on the outside of the tanker where we would first place the Intake Canal at the bottom, going all the way down until about 5-10 feet from the sea floor. Then, on the top of the ship will be everything else like the Particle Settlement, Sound Filters, Diatomaceous Earth Filters, Residual Treatment Plants, Cartridge Filters, and Pumps. On the side of the tanker will be the Discharge Canal. This is placed there to allow the clean water to flow back into the Dead Zones. This will also help push air into the water like the filter does in a fish tank. It can help also with the Texas Drought by pushing moisture into the air. With the Dead Zones location being in the Gulf it has hurt our fishing and our water recycle to land. What we can do from time to time is shoot water up into the air to help with the rains recycle system. I would greatly appreciate any and all support and/or advice you may have to offer. I'd really like to hear what you think about this idea. I have contacted a few other people about my idea and hope that maybe you could speak with them as well about what you just read. Enclosed you will find copies of letters from the two individuals that I would like for you to contact on my behalf, a Mr. Rob Whiteman and Mrs. Peggy M. Hatch. Please feel free to contact me anytime also for any questions or concerns you may have.

Thank you for taking time out of your busy schedule today to read my letter. Hope to hear from you soon. Have a great day!

Sincerely,
Deon E. Adams
